ATLANTA, Sept. 14, 2016 /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ -- In collaboration with Curing Kids Cancer, the American Cancer Society today announced the launch of a new initiative, A House United to Tackle Pediatric Cancer™. The program targets college football fans through 12 of IMG's partner universities to raise awareness and funds for childhood cancer. A House United to Tackle Pediatric Cancer will bring together college football coaches and ambassadors from across the country to ask fans to help raise funds for pediatric cancer programs and research.

Pediatric cancer is the second leading cause of death among children ages 1-14 in the United States. The American Cancer Society estimates that in 2016, there will be 10,380 new cancer cases diagnosed among children in the United States.

"As the Society continues to work with the sports industry to fund cancer research and create world class cancer prevention initiatives, we are proud to expand our sports strategy to mobilize a new audience within college football to help save lives from childhood cancer," said Sharon Byers, Chief Development Officer, American Cancer Society.

All proceeds from the initiative will be used to support research and programs for pediatric cancer from the American Cancer Society. The 12 universities currently participating are:

College football fans can donate directly to their school's campaign and spread the word through their networks to help raise awareness and funds. Corporations, companies, schools, and community groups can also join this initiative to work together for a single purpose of defeating pediatric cancer.

"This partnership with the American Cancer Society will create an incredible platform for A House United to Tackle Pediatric Cancer to bring a very important message to the passionate collegiate sports audience," said Andrew Judelson, Executive Vice President, Sales and Marketing, IMG College. "These 12 universities are making an impact well beyond the playing field, and they are leading the way for the support of pediatric cancer research and programs."
